The Return of Spring. BY PRV. J. T. BARR.

Name, from from Winter's gloome raign, Fair Flora translathe ras et plun.
And strews har verus! flowers: The trees out on their wested deen, While other forons gates performs The amarauthino bewers.

Hail, lovely Spring! the smiling face Inspires delight in every place, And hids meets four depart; I've wen the come, and pres away, Yet at 1 return, with a peet gav. To cheer the drooping heart.

Alas! it is not so with man, Whose life is transient as a spun, A onlibe is a breath: His Spring and Summer soon are pass. He sickens at the Autumn's blast. And Winter scale his drath.

The spring flowers o'er his grave shall grow. And genial breezes softly blow
Around his lowly hed;
But so nes are vain, and sounds no more
Affect his sar; his days are o'er, And all his thoughts are fled .

Yet, when this earth shall melt away --When these revolving seasons stay-And time shall be no in re-Man saved by grace, shall burst the tomb. And flourish in immortal bloom,
